What are your imaginary numbers, your interior and narrative prompts?

after Ambre Russe

(a perfume from Parfum d'Empire by Marc-Antoine Corticchiato)

Olfactive portraits of great empires To mix history with perfume is sumptuous, baroque One spritz will carry you across a battleground for long distances Spell excess in the languages of Tsars Leather sins like an incense or atonement An authoritative composition, a form of consolation His breath has a velvety agreement, a honey-like obviousness a courageous booziness
The light vivifies
Underline the large characters and their dark flowers their coriander groove

Are you very excited in French or Spanish?

[The moment we smelled Ambre Russe, we knew that we found our new Holy Grail amber scent / Initially, one is treated to a heady, spirituous accord, supplied by the bitter, salty vodka. Bracing / I'd suggest one avoids spraying Ambre Russe in the car, because there can be breathalyzer issues if stopped by police / I grumbled. Vodka note in a perfume with "Russian" in its title, how stereotypical is that?!]

A couple of years ago while spending my New Year's holiday in Rome I caught a glimpse through the glass of Hotel de Russie's hall
It was dark and rather cold outside but inside the lights were burning the air seemed warm and full of scents (vodka, champagne and fine foods, smoke and ladies perfumes...)
and, most stunningly a weird composition of Christmas trees made out of blond fur (!) towered in the middle...
It didn't scream, "Smell me. I'm rich!" by a shadowy insertion of dark incense

The three main elements are in perfect balance and the agreement in sweet restraint This is not an exercise in syrupy melliflence A touch of rooty tea, the sweet-resinous amber impresses the dusty effect just at the beginning a bit laundry Opulent

We are at the end of our intervals now

As if a river of vodka could make up for leather deteriorating Champagne and honey commit a crime here, burnt We tilt heavily toward beginnings

A passionate love affair dark and boozy and sexy and amber and very bittersweet

The list of notes include vodka and champagne, leather, tea, incense, and cinnamon Enough to keep anyone warm all winter

This makes me want to build a time machine set the dials, go back and find me a debauched fading Russian aristo, blue-eyed and bitter and play good old fashioned leather games Always remember that boots were indeed made for walking sometimes on each other Sniffing it off my wrist in my candlelit room I could throw vodka around fur-scattered rooms drink champagne to the sound of gunfire and boots marching on stone

Ambre Russe opens with an accord

The signature accord of this scent is dry, hazy brown in texture with a boozy tinge

If

Why would we care about a perfume becoming an empire?

Excited, representative, accumulative

The past was big and worsening historical and fragrant you To believe in Russian amber is an acknowledgement of time

To this, add sweet powdery tea notes
One is reminded of the L'Artisan classic Tea for Two for a moment with the way tea is executed By mid-accords, supple notes of saddle leather along with precious amber exudes a rich powdery glow This persists throughout turning smoky and powdery towards the base
This is one of the best offerings by PdE and easily one of the best Amber based scent out there

The scent of Napoleon was getting worse

I once had the opportunity to visit Russia when I was participating in a joint show of Russian and American artists They graciously held a reception for us at a very grand old building that sits opposite the Saint Basil Cathedral on Red Square in Moscow Beautiful crystal chandeliers provided warm, ambient light and as a string quartet played tuxedoed waiters kept the champagne and vodka coming on polished silver trays At some point during that cold December evening the huge wooden doors of that grand building were flung open and became a perfect frame for the view of the onion-domed cathedral at the opposite end of the square Perfect snowflakes fell and I stood mesmerized

Booziness like a deferred profit inside their suppressing form Efflorescence hangs remarkably around amber the smell of which is exaggerated in compliance with difference An ingredient magic, our thing completely, that examines the persistence of a grass smell, rabbit and vanilla and leather
